

Doctors, Aussie MP Battle Pharma mafia for anti-COVID drugs that work

“What is being revealed in my opinion, about the world of global public health, public health in general, is being run like a mafia. There’s a Don somewhere and he’s got all these families that go by NGO names ... world body names. These are like Mafia families and they are using money laundering and extortion and a kind of protection racket scheme to cripple nation states and at the same time of course, enrich themselves.” - Independent researcher Polly St George aka “Amazing Polly”

IN March 2020 a group of critical care doctors called Frontline Covid-19 Critical Care Alliance, embarked on a project to compile research and trial results on ivermectin, an anti-parasitic medicine commonly used on animals, but also to treat COVID-19 (SARS_Cov2).

Over four months the group, led by Professor Paul E. Marik, found and reviewed numerous, controlled clinical trials from multiple centers and countries worldwide that reported consistent, large improvements in COVID patient outcomes when treated with ivermectin. A comprehensive scientific review of the trials is available at the Open Science Foundation pre-print server.

The summary of the research notes that an independent meta-analysis calculated the chances that ivermectin was ineffective in COVID-19 to be 1 in 67 million. By the most conservative estimates, that’s at least 67 times less than the chances of getting a serious or fatal COVID vaccine reaction (nearly 4000 post-vaccination deaths so far in Europe).

The enthusiastic doctors could see great promise in widespread ivermectin treatments and were given a hearing in the US Senate Homeland Security Committee. But FCCCA members were insulted by Democrat senator Gary Peters who ignorantly suggested the claims about ivermectin were a “conspiracy theory” and left the hearing without asking questions. The dismissals of ivermectin and hydroxychloroquine (HCL), the latter supported and used by another group called America’s Frontline Doctors, have been fueled by mainstream media who have been pushing the narrative that “only a vaccine can save us from COVID”.

The fact that President Trump suggested the use of HCL also helped drive the nonsensical, rabid opposition to COVID treatments as opposed to vaccines that didn’t even exist. This included several bogus “studies” attacking HCL that were seized upon by the anti-Trump media. One of the studies got as far as The Lancet but had to be retracted.

This diabolical, profit-motivated narrative that led to HCL being banned by American and Australian states, has cost thousands of lives that could have been saved by use of both of these drugs. HCL was in fact used very early in the pandemic by New York doctor Vladimir Zelenko with a nearly 100% success rate. Other doctors across the US also spoke of its high rates of success.

Around this time, eminent Australian medical research professor Thomas Borody, who developed a globally used triple-therapy treatment for peptic ulcers, began to advocate for ivermectin as a COVID treatment. In August he released a triple therapy treatment that is legally available for prescription but studiously ignored by Australian health authorities like Australian Chief Health Officer Dr Paul Kelly, who oversaw the banning of hydroxychloroquine for COVID-19 treatment. Another Australian medical academic, Professor Peter McCullough, is also advocating for ivermectin and early drug treatments.

Meanwhile, last January, 700 doctors in South Africa, following the example of thousands of colleagues in the US, Europe, Panama, Brazil and other nations, called for ivermectin to be legalized as it was already widely sold on a black market. South African President Cyril Ramaphosa agreed, but the medical authorities would only make it available through a restrictive, time-consuming process.

The South African doctors (and others worldwide) in effect sent a middle-finger message to the Gates-Rockefeller global pharma and their “only vaccines can save us” narrative, but the South African Health Products Regulation Agency, which is part of the recently established global network of health products regulation agencies, resisted.

In sharp contrast, Panama’s Health Ministry had in January already sent out more than 67,000 Covid Kits containing ivermectin and hydroxychloroquine tablets to people who had tested positive for Covid. That’s a brave move for a vulnerable central American country.

Australian federal MP Craig Kelly has been raising the examples of South Africa and Panama on social media and has recently had close to a million views.

“The results are now in, they show that Panama’s Covid Kits have crushed the nation’s death rate, saving thousands of lives in that country,” said Kelly in a social media post. “Panama’s decline in death rates have been one of the most successful in the world. And Panama did this when health bureaucrats in Australia were using their powers to threaten jail to anyone in Australia who did similar.”

Kelly went on to blast Australian Labor politicians and media: “And while Panama was saving lives with these kits, Albanese and Bowen were mocking and ridiculing these treatments – and they were being supported by the ABC and other left wing media. “Nasty little hate groups got their kicks from attacking me for posting the evidence and the peer-reviewed science on FB (Facebook).

"Even today, despite Panama's obvious success and the overwhelming evidence of the published studies for Ivermectin (50 out 50) and early treatment HCQ studies (30 out 30), both these treatments are still demonised and ridiculed by the medical mafia and their useful idiot supporters, because if you follow the money, it's never been about people's health, it's only ever been about selling expensive experimental and novel treatments, which have made a few billions."

Despite the abundance of evidence for ivermectin, late in March the mainstream media jumped on the South African issue with the BBC blatantly lying "Ivermectin: South African medics using unproven worm drug to treat COVID-19". BBC news has been given a massive $53 million "grant" (a bribe really) by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation for "supporting governance and providing health advice". BBC are certainly living up to the expectations of the lunatic eugenicist Gates and his pharma-tech empire.

The BBC's big lie echoed the South African medical bureaucrats who claimed "There is insufficient evidence for or against the use of Ivermectin in the prevention or treatment of Covid-19." By any reasonable definition of the word "insufficient", the statement is complete nonsense, and no doubt driven by Gates and his vaccine-pushing operation.

BBC also quoted Dr John Nkengasong, director of the Africa Centers for Disease Control and Prevention: "They should not use it. They should be relying on resources that are tested through controlled, clinical trials." He said reports that the drug is effective are "anecdotal reports and are not scientifically driven."

The stupid and extremely embarrassing statement, coming from the man who heads the African CDC, is consistent with misinformation spewed by Dr Anthony Fauci, America's chief pandemic promoter. Fauci is up to his eyeballs in pharma royalties paid to the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID), which he has run since 1984. He claims he donates his share of royalties to "charities".

NIAID also happens to be involved in a global vaccine project launched in 2010 by the Gates Foundation in collaboration with the World Health Organization. NIAID has received $18 million from the Gates Foundation.

And surprise, surprise, the EU's medicines regulator announced in the Medical Xpress (March 22nd) that it "advised against using ivermectin for coronavirus outside clinical trials", claiming only headlines were "touting it as a miracle cure". Again, more lies from a crooked, compromised arm of the global health mafia that makes the actual Mafia look like rank amateurs.
