Brilliant! How Russians Crushed Moscow's Vaccine Passports in Just 3 Weeks

About 40 state legislatures are now following Governor Ron DeSantis' lead in Florida by moving to ban vaccine passports. But some states and cities are already implementing vaccine passports – and it looks like the puppet-masters running the Biden regime are going to try to force a federal vaccine passport on us very soon. They've got to keep their COVID quackery in place through 2022, so they can pull the same election shenanigans as they did last year.

What are we as free Americans to do about this? Well, we already have one good example of citizens defeating a tyrant mayor's vaccine passports – in Russia, of all places.

You've probably heard of the Excelsior Pass, which is now mandatory in New York City thanks to Pothead Bill DeBlasio, the city's mayor. Once a person is vaccinated, they can have their HIPAA rights and their constitutionally protected right to travel preserved by getting a QR code on their phone. If you don't have a QR code, Pothead Bill won't let you go to a restaurant or do lots of other stuff.

The Mayor of Moscow Russia, a guy named Sergei Sobyenin, thought that Pothead Bill's commie QR code idea was just ducky. So, Sobyenin made vaccination QR code passports mandatory on the 1st of July this year. Mayor Sobyenin apparently doesn't smoke as much pot as Pothead Bill, so his vaccine passport plan was actually less restrictive than Pothead Bill's.

For example, if you've already had coronavirus, you are immune to it. You have better immunity than any vaccine can provide. So, Moscow citizens who have had coronavirus and recovered can get a QR code just like a vaccinated person can.

Just like in New York City, it suddenly became illegal for dirty unvaccinated second-class citizens to go certain places. Moscow residents were no longer allowed to eat at restaurants, get their hair cut, go to a movie theater, stay in a hotel, work out at a gym, have a beer at the tavern after work, or get their fingernails done at a nail salon. If they didn't have a QR code, they were banned from participating in many aspects of the city's economy.

Here's how they crushed Mayor Sobyenin's vaccine passport – and it was pretty simple. Moscow residents simply stopped frequenting any business that required a vaccine passport.

The really beautiful thing about this was that the vaccinated people stood in solidarity with the unvaccinated. Business trickled to near zero at all establishments where the vaccine passport was required.

Moscow residents let their hair grow out, skipped going to bars and restaurants, didn't go to the movies, didn't stay in hotels or do anything else that required a vaccine passport.

Business owners from all over the city were suddenly calling Mayor Sobyenin's office to chew his ear off about the vaccine passports. They were going broke, and they were mad as hell about it.

Marina Zemskova, the head of a regional hotel and restaurant association in Russia, said the vaccine passport turned out to be worse for business than a full lockdown. At least if there was another lockdown, she notes, businesses "could count on some kind of government support measures."

There's no government support coming under a vaccine passport system. What the not-very-elite elites failed to anticipate about Moscow residents was they would simply not participate in the scam at all.

The business owners were so infuriated with the mayor that Sobyenin made a sudden, surprise announcement on July 19th that nobody needs to use a vaccine passport anymore. He made up a hilarious excuse, claiming that COVID case rates were all better suddenly, as the reason for lifting the QR code passports.

But everyone knew the truth. Moscow residents decided that their medical privacy and their right to travel is more important than whatever the people in charge were telling them.

It was a massive case of civil disobedience – and they didn't even have to go outside and set things on fire in a big protest. All they did was say, "Any business that wants to see a vaccine passport from me is not getting any of my money."

That's how you do it, Americans! Vaccine passports are the new Jim Crow, and we don't have to take it. Want to beat the CoronaTyrants at their own game? Just do like the Russians did. Refuse to participate in the Fauci/Biden mandates.
